Title: "The The Study and Factor Analysis on the Development of Online Storytelling Media Via Gamification to Enhance the Digital Literacy Skills of Students in Computer Education Thailand."

Abstract:

The objectives of this research were 1) to study and analyze factors of the model, and 2) to evaluate the model appropriateness based on primary sources and secondary sources from 42 related documents and research papers. The research instruments consisted of lesson plans, learning models, tests of digital literacy skills, and assessments of workpieces. The results of the study and factor analysis of the model showed 12 factors relating to learning activity management using online storytelling media via gamification in 2 aspects. The test of digital literacy skills was in a subjective form consisting of 2 parts; i.e., design knowledge and development of digital media in 10 factors with 29 variables. The test was validated by experts for the appropriateness of the learning model through online storytelling media via gamification to enhance digital literacy skills for computer education students. Overall, the model was found to have the highest appropriateness level (mean = 4.62, S.D. = 0.13) so it can be used in real learning and teaching situations and it is helpful for enhancing students' digital literacy skills in the design and development of digital media. Based on the findings, the students could extend their learning scope with digital literacy skills in building digital media. These skills are necessary for Thai teachers in dealing with students in the future, and the model can be a prototype for doing classroom-based research or presenting research work at a national level.
