I am attaching our manuscript entitled "Design and Evaluation of Mobile-Based Applications for Supporting Malaria Surveillance Activities in Indonesian Regions" for publication in International Journal of Advanced Multidisciplinary Research (IJAMR)

Surveillance is vital in malaria elimination operations. In an effort to improve the validity and completeness of malaria data reporting, Indonesia developed an electronic information system in the form of a structured excel file. Using this strategy, however, still has its drawbacks. This study developed an Android-based malaria surveillance app as an alternative to the current method. Its overall impression is quite good (mean, median (on a 9-point scale) and standard deviation are 6.84, 6.88 and 0.29, respectively). This signifies that officers are generally satisfied with the generated applications.

The article is significant for a readership interested in malaria surveillance, including policymakers and public health workers and readers interested in malaria elimination

We hope that our manuscript is suitable for publication in International Journal of Advanced Multidisciplinary Research (IJAMR)

We look forward to hearing from you.

Yours sincerely,

Hamzah Hasyim (on behalf of all authors)

Dear

Editor-in-Chief

International Journal of Advanced Multidisciplinary Research \(IJAMR\)

I saw International Journal of Advanced Multidisciplinary Research \(IJAMR\) is not indexed by Scopus currently or is not in the database <https://www.scimagojr.com/>. On the other hand, the Journal of Interdisciplinary and Multidisciplinary Research has a bit similar name and is discontinued in Scopus as of 2009

The Ministry of Education and Culture Indonesia only recognized that the paper is published in a journal that has a database following
